FOREWORD

Vital statistics records have a three fold importance. They are a large part of the material from which the genealogist compiles his family trees; they contain the data on which the vital statistician bases his charts and tables; and they constitute legal proof of nativity and social relationships whose substantiation, or lack of substantiation, vitally affects the social and economic interests of individuals.

Not many centuries ago it was considered the duty of the ecclesiastical authorities to record all baptisms, weddings, and funerals performed by them. Such records served the same purpose, for the community, as do our modern vital statistics, at a time when all, or almost all, were members of a single ecclesiastical body.

Under the changed circumstances of the modern world, this is no longer true. It is now generally recognized that the recording of vital statistics is a public function devolving upon the government.

In Georgia the Court of Ordinary, or, in earlier times, the Inferior Court, sitting for ordinary purposes, assumed these once ecclesiastical functions, just as it took over the probate duties traditionally within the jurisdiction of the church courts. It is interesting to note that divorces, which were formly granted only by legislative action, and against which there had always existed religious scruples, have never fallen within the jurisdiction of the Court of Ordinary. Although, as a rule the Ordinary has recorded births, marriages, and deaths in Georgia, the Clerk of the Superior Court has recorded divorces.

For a time, very little importance was attached, by the general public, to the collection or recording of vital statistics. Although various laws were passed permitting, or requiring, the keeping of such records, substantial accuracy and completeness were not obtained until the establishment of a bureau of vital statistics within the State Department of Public Health.

No inventory of the existing situation with regard to such records throughout the State had been attempted until the organization of the Georgia Historical Records Survey. We greatly appreciate the foresight of the Federal Government in preparing such a compilation of data, and trust that this volume will prove to be useful to those who are interested in locating and obtaining individual records of births, deaths, marriages, and divorces occurring in our State.

The Georgia Department of Public Health is glad to have had the opportunity of playing a part in compiling these important data.

T. F. Abercrombie, M. D., Director
Georgia Department of Public Health

PREFACE

The Historical Records Survey was organized by Dr. Luther H. Evans, who served as Director of the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress. He was succeeded on March 1,1940 by Sargent B. Child, who had served in the capacity of Field Supervisor since the inauguration of the Survey. The Survey operates under the Research and Records Programs, Division of Community Service Programs, Work Projects Administration,of which Mrs. Florence Kerr,Assistant Commissioner,is in charge.

The Guide to Public Vital Statistics Records in Georgia is based on data secured in the fall of 1940, when the Survey made an inventory of public vital statistics records in the several States at the request of the National Defense Commission and the United States Bureau of the Census. The primary arrangement of the Guide is by type of vital statistics record, the secondary arrangement by governmental unit. The records entries show inclusive dates, nature of the record, number of volumes or other containers, method of arrangement, indexing, title and address of the custodian, and the cost of certified copies, or a statement that certified copies are not available.

Acknowledgment is due Dr. David M. Wolfe, Director, Division of Information and Statistics, State Department of Public Health, and the numerous custodians of vital statistics records throughout the State, for their cooperation in the inventory of their records. The Survey is especially indebted to the State Department of Public Health for supplying the materials used in publishing this volume.

The field inventory of vital statistics records was made in Georgia under the direction of District Supervisors of Historical Records Survey. The Guide was prepared for publication in the State Office of the Survey. It was reviewed by the editorial staff of Historical Survey, Central Office in Washington, D.C.

The publications of the Historical Records Survey are issued for free distribution to certain State and local public officials, public libraries in Georgia, and to a limited number of libraries and governmental agencies outside the State. This Guide to Public Vital Statistics will also be distributed to all State Vital Statistics Bureaus in the United States. Requests for information concerning these publications should be addressed to R. V. Connerat, State Supervisor, Research and Records Programs, Ten Forsyth Street Building, Atlanta, Georgia.

The Georgia Legislature was whereas-ing as early as 1823 about the "embarassing difficulties" experienced by the courts in attempting to administer justice because there was no provision for the keeping of an official record of births. In that year the legislature made it the duty of the clerks of the courts of ordinary of each county to register all persons who reported themselves, or were reported by their parents or guardians, as well as all infants who might thereafter be born and reported by their parents. A fee of 25¢ was charged for each person registered.[1] This act was permissive only, and very few of these old registers are in existence today.[2]

There seems to have been little or no legislation in regard to recording births from 1823 until the State Board of Health was created in 1875.[3] The act provided that the secretary of the Board should be "Superintendent of Registration of Vital Statistics," and the bureau thus created was charged with the duty, among other things, of collecting and preserving a record of all births in the State. The Board of Health was required to provide forms upon which births were to be reported. All physicians in the State, and parents where no physician attended, were required, under penalty of $10 for failure to do so, to report births to the ordinary of their respective counties on the forms provided, and the ordinaries in turn reported the births to the secretary of the State Board. The ordinaries were also required by this act to record all births in a separate book kept by them for that purpose.[4]

The provisions of the act of 1875 imposing a penalty of $10 upon physicians and parents for failure to report births was promptly repealed by the legislature the following year.[5] This might explain in part why the birth records of the State Bureau of Vital Statistics are so sketchy prior to 1919.

The General Assembly again created a State Board of Health by an act of 1903.[6] This act was primarily concerned with revamping the structural organization of the Board, and did not affect the provisions relating to collecting and preserving vital statistics.

In 1914 legislation was enacted setting forth in detail the manner in which vital statistics were to be gathered and the forms to be used in reporting births and deaths. This act provided for the appointment of a State Registrar of Vital Statistics and the central bureau of vital statistics was placed under the immediate direction of this official. The bureau and the registrar remained under the general supervision of the Secretary of the State Board of Health. The State was divided into registration districts, as follows: Each city or incorporated town and each militia district was made a primary registration district and the city or town clerks and justices of the peace were named local registrars. The local registrars were required to number birth certificates consecutively, beginning at number 1 for the first birth in their districts each calendar year, and to make a copy of each certificate in a book furnished them by the State Registrar for that purpose. These volumes of copies of certificates were supposed to have been permanently preserved in the district registrar's office as a local record. All births occuring in a local registration district during each calendar month were required to be reported to the State Registrar on the 10th of the following month. The State Registrar was required by this act to "arrange, bind and permanently preserve the certificates in a systematic manner," and to "prepare and maintain a comprehensive and continuous card index of all births . . . , said index to be arranged alphabetically, . . . in case of births, by the names of fathers and mothers." Copies of birth certificates cost 50¢. The State Registrar was also authorized to receive, record, and index records of births, or duly authenticated copies thereof, from cemetery associations, churches, and historical societies.[7]

Following are the provisions of the act of 1914 as to the contents of a birth certificate: "(1) Place of birth, including State, county, incorporated town, village or city. If in a city, the ward, street and house number; if in a hospital or other institution, the name of the same to be given instead of the street and house number. (2) Full name of child. If the child dies without a name, before the certificate is filed, enter the words "Died unnamed." If the living child has not yet been named, at the date of filing certificate of birth, the space for full name of child is to be left blank, to be filled out subsequently by a supplemental report, as hereinafter provided. (3) Sex of child. (4) Whether a twin, triplet, or other plural birth. A separate certificate shall be required for each child in case of plural births. (5) For plural births, number of each child in order of birth. (6) Whether legitimate or illegitimate. (7) Date of birth including year, month and date. (8) Full name of father; provided, that if the child is illegitimate, the name of the putative father shall not be entered without his consent, but the other particulars relating to the putative father (Items 9 to 13) may be entered if known, otherwise as "unknown." (9) Residence of father. (10) Color or race of father. (11) Age of father at last birthday, in years. (12) Birth place of father, at least State, or foreign country, if known. (13) Occupation of father. The occupation to be reported if engaged in any remunerative employment, with the statement of (a) trade, profession, or particular kind of work; (b) general nature of industry, business or establishment in which employed (or employer). (14) Maiden name of mother. (15) Residence of mother. (16) Color or race of mother. (17) Age of mother at last birthday, in years. (18) (19) Occupation of mother. The occupation to be reported if engaged in any remunerative employment, with the statement of (a) trade, profession, or particular kind of work, (b) general nature of industry, business or establishment in which employed (or employer). (20) number of children born to this mother, including present birth. (21) The certification of the attending physician or midwife as to the attendance at birth, including statement of year, month, day (as given in Item 7) and hour of birth, and whether the child was born alive or stillborn. This certification shall be signed by the attending physician or midwife, with the date of signature and address; if there is no physician or midwife in attendance, then by the father or mother of the child, householder, owner of the premises or manager or superintendent of public or private institution where the birth occurred, or other competent person, whose duty it shall be to notify the local registrat of such birth, as required by Section 13, of this Act. (23) Exact date of filing in office of local registrat, attested by his official signature, and registered number of birth, as hereinafter provided."[8] With a few additions, this is substantially the contents of a birth certificate today.

Five years later an amendment to the act of 1914 authorized the State Board of Health to combine two or more registration districts, establish additional districts by dividing a primary district, and appoint registrats for such districts. This amendment also made it the duty of the local registrats to appoint deputies to serve in their stead when they were not available for the purpose of registration, and provided for health officers of cities and incorporated towns to serve as local registrars.[9]

In 1927 the legislature re-enacted the act of 1914 almost verbatim. The 1927 act, however, made it clear that the State Board of Health could summarily remove city clerks, town clerks, and justices of the peace for failure to properly discharge their duties as local registrars, and appoint others in their stead. It provided that birth certificates carry this additional item of information: Number of children of mother living. This act relieved local registrars of the chore of preserving copies of birth certificates, but made it their duty to file copies of all certificates issued by them with the county or city health officer in those counties where the office exists, and with the ordinary in counties having no health officer.[10] The original birth certificates, of course, are forwarded to the bureau of vital statistics of the State Department of Public Health in Atlanta. This is the procedure followed at the present time.

The executive branches of the State Government were reorganized by the General Assembly in 1931. The reorganizing act abolished the State Board of Health and the office of the State Registrar of Vital Statistics, and transferred all their powers, duties, and functions to a State Department of Public Health. The office of Director of the Department of Public Health was also created by this act.[11] The 1931 act was repealed 2 years later and the State Board of Health was recreated. The office of Director of the Department of Public Health, as well as the Department itself, were re-established. The act of 1933 also reaffirmed the abolition of the office of State Registrar of Vital Statistics, and transferred the powers, duties, and functions of the office to the State Board of Health.[12] Code section 88-1212, providing for the issuance of certified copies of birth certificates on file with the bureau of vital statistics of the State Board of Health, was amended in 1935 so as to require that certified copies of certificates be issued in the name of the Director of the Department of Public Health instead of the State Board of Health.[13]

DEATH RECORDS

The legal provisions affecting the registration of deaths in Georgia, and the agencies for effecting such registrations, are, and have been, substantially the same as those for the registration of births.

There appears to have been no legislation in regard to recording deaths until the State Board of Health was created in 1875.[1] The act provided that the secretary of the Board should be "Superintendent of Registration of Vital Statistics," and the bureau thus created was charged with the duty, among other things, of collecting and preserving a record of all deaths in the State. All physicians in the State, and parents where no physician attended, were required, under this law to file reports of deaths to the ordinary of their respective counties on the forms prescribed and supplied by the Board. The ordinaries, in turn, were required to report deaths to the secretary of the State Board, and to record all deaths in a separate book kept by them for that purpose.[2]

The General Assembly again created a State Board of Health by an act of 1903.[3] This act did not alter the provisions relating to collecting and preserving vital statistics, but was concerned principally with adjusting the structural organization of the Board.

As in the case of births, legislation was enacted in 1914 to establish in detail the manner in which vital statistics were to be gathered and forms to be used. It provided for the appointment of a State Registrar of Vital Statistics whose duties were to gather and record births and deaths, and to provide for the enforcement of the provisions of the act. He was further required to bind and permanently preserve these certificates. Copies of death certificates cost 50¢.[4]

In 1927 the legislature re-enacted the act of 1914 almost verbatim. It made clear, however, the authority of the State Board of Health to remove city clerks, town clerks, and justices of the peace for failure to properly discharge their duties as local registrars, and appoint others in their stead.

Information required to be shown on death certificates as set forth in the acts of 1914 and 1927 follows: (1) Place of death, including State, county, incorporated town, village, or city. (2) Full name of decedent. (3) Sex. (4) Color or race. (5) Conjugal relation. (6) Date of birth. (7) Age. (8) Occupation. (9) Birthplace. (10) Name of father. (11) Birthplace of father. (12) Maiden name of mother. (13) Birthplace of mother. (14) Signature and address of informant. (15) Official signature of registrar, with date when certificate was filed and registered number. (16) Date of death. (17) Certification as to medical attention on decedent, fact and time of death, and cause of death. (18) Length of residence for inmates of hospitals or other institutions. (19) Place of burial, and date. (20) Signature of undertaker or person acting as such.[5]

Since 1919 a death certificate on the standard form approved by the United States Bureau of Census, has been used in Georgia and local registrars, after making a copy of the certificate in a book kept for that purpose, must, on the tenth day of each month, transmit to the State Registrar all death certificates registered with him during the preceding month.

Records of deaths kept by the local registrars vary as to fullness of information given. The minimum data shown are date, name, color, birthplace, residence, cause of death, and name of medical attendant.

Certified copies of death certificates may be obtained from the Registrar of Vital Statistics, Georgia Department of Public Health, Atlanta. They may also be secured in any town or county where there is a health officer, or from the ordinary of a county where there is no health officer.

MARRIAGE RECORDS

In Georgia persons desiring to enter into a contract of marriage have always been required to secure a license therefor. These licenses were issued by the clerks of the Inferior Courts of the several counties from 1799 to 1852.[1] The Inferior Court functioning in this capacity, was discontinued in 1852, and the powers of the Court of Ordinary, vested in an Ordinary for each county, were given authority to grant marriage licenses.[2]

In 1875 legislation was enacted requiring that the ordinaries of the several counties keep separate books to record all marriages which take place in their counties, and to render a report of all marriages to the secretary of the State Board of Health, at such time as the said Board may direct.[3] The provisions of this law were re-enacted in 1919 and provided for the registration of all marriages with the State Bureau of Vital Statistics.[4] Although the Georgia law still provides for the maintenance of marriage records by the Bureau of Vital Statistics of the State Department of Health, this procedure has never been initiated. It is thought that no appropriation has ever been made to put it in operation.

Applications for marriage licenses as provided by law in the act of 1924 and amended in 1927 show: Names of contracting parties, residence, City, County and State, age, relationship, if any, white or colored, previously married, divorced upon what grounds, when and where, any legal impediment, date and place of contemplated marriage, parents' residence, and parents' nationality.[5]

Marriage licenses are granted by the ordinaries, or their deputies, of the several counties where the female to be married resides. After ceremony has been performed, the said licenses must be returned to the ordinary by the officiant within thirty days after date of marriage and the ordinary in turn records the license in a book kept by him for that purpose, and the original certificate made available to applicant.

The general law provides that, "the State Board of Health shall at all times keep the ordinary of each county in the State supplied with a sufficient number of said forms of application for marriage license to care for all applications for marriage license".[6] As in the case of providing a central depository for marriage licenses, apparently no appropriation has been made available to put this into effect, and it is the practice for each county to supply its own certificates. These certificates in all counties, however, furnish the same general information.

DIVORCE RECORDS

In Georgia divorces were granted exclusively by the Legislature until the adoption of the Constitution of 1798, which provided that a verdict be obtained in the superior court authorizing a divorce before the General Assembly could pass, by a two-thirds vote of each branch, a confirmatory act.[1]

The mode of procedure, recognizing total divorces only, was set out by the Legislature in 1802.[2] An amendatory act of 1806 provided for two forms of divorce - total and conditional (separating the parties from bed and board). This act further provided that where the special jury brought in a verdict for absolute divorce, and the General Assembly refused to carry the verdict into effect, either party might apply to the superior court, whose duty it became to appoint three commissioners, who reported their decision or decree back to the court. This decision was entered as the court's judgment, subject to be altered or modified by the court at its next session, upon application of either party. In this event, the court referred the report to the same commissioners, with two additional commissioners, whose decision, after re-examination of the case, was entered as the judgment of the court.[3]

In 1833 a constitutional amendment was proposed which provided that "divorce shall be final and conclusive when the parties shall have obtained the concurrent verdicts of two special juries authorizing a divorce on legal principles."[4]

In 1847 the General Assembly was empowered to establish the "legal principles" upon which divorces should be allowed. Divorce has remained under the exclusive jurisdiction of the superior court since that time.[5]

Parties divorced from bed and board, on subsequent reconciliation, may live together again as husband and wife by first filing in the office of the ordinary of the county where the divorce was granted, their written agreement to that effect, attested by the ordinary.

No specific reference to recording divorces is made by the laws of Georgia, but there are general provisions of law requiring the recording of pleadings in all cases by the clerk of the superior court. Paragraphs 1 and 2 of these provisions read: "The clerk of the superior court is also required:

"1. To record in well-bound books, within six months after the final determination of any civil suit, all the proceedings relating thereto.

3 Ga. Acts 1806, pp. 16-20.
4 Ga. Acts 1833, pp. 47-48.
5 Ga. Acts 1847, pp. 63, 64.

"2. Every clerk of the superior or city courts must record immediately in his book of final records every part of the pleadings in every case; all garnishments, affidavits, bonds, and answers thereto; all attachment affidavits, bonds, and writs of attachment; all claim affidavits and bonds, and all bonds given in any judicial proceeding; and no clerk shall allow any of such papers to be taken from his office before recording them as herein required; and such record shall be a part of the final record of the papers required by law to be made, or all such record, as the case may be."[6]

Divorce papers generally consist of the petition, process, first and second verdicts, and the decree, and they show: Name of plaintiff and defendant; names and ages of children, if any; date and place of marriage; residence of plaintiff and defendant; property involved in litigation, if any, and property settlement made, if any; and whether alimony or support is allowed.

The general law provides that the clerk receive 15¢ per 100 words for exemplification of records (decrees of divorce are usually under 100 words), plus 50¢ for certificate and seal.[7] It is the practice, however, in most of the counties of the State for the superior court clerk to charge $1.50 for certified copies of decrees.

There is no central depository for registering divorces in Georgia. Although the General Assembly in 1919 provided that divorces should be registered with the State Bureau of Vital Statistics, the provisions of this act have never been carried into effect.[8] It is presumed that the reason for this is that no appropriation has ever been made to put it in operation.

With the exception of the 17 counties, enumerated in the entries below, all of Georgia's 159 counties file their divorce papers in with their civil case papers.
